Presented:
TexasBarCLE
39th Annual Advanced Family Law Course
August 5-8, 2013
San Antonio, TX

OUT OF THE FRYING PAN AND INTO THE FIRE – THE PERILS OF MINORITY STOCK OWNERSHIP IN A PRIVATE TEXAS COMPANY ACQUIRED THROUGH A DIVORCE SETTLEMENT OR DECREE

Ladd A. Hirsch
James D. Sheppard

Author contact information:
Ladd A. Hirsch
James D. Sheppard
Diamond McCarthy LLP
1201 Elm Street, 34th Floor
Dallas, TX 75270

LHirsch@diamondmccarthy.com
214-389-5323
JSheppard@diamondmccarthy.com
214-389-5347

TABLE OF CONTENTS

TABLE OF AUTHORITIES

Cases

A. INTRODUCTION

A divorcing spouse who receives a minority stock interest in a private Texas company in the divorce decree will also want to obtain, if at all possible, a contractual exit right to ensure that he/she can sell this minority interest for reasonable value in the future. In the absence of that right of redemption (sometimes referred to as a "put"), the minority owner spouse may be exchanging one legal battleground for another. Or as Willie Nelson might have written if he had been asked to pen the lyrics to the difficulties faced by minority shareholders in Texas, "Mamas don't let your babies grow up to be minority shareholders without a redemption agreement." This version of Willie's song would surely be a dud on country radio, but it is sage advice.

An investor who buys or acquires (by gift, inheritance, settlement or decree) a minority ownership stake in a private Texas company without also securing an exit strategy is likely to be "locked in" and unable to dispose of this ownership interest when he/she desires to sell. In most cases, there is no market for a minority shareholder's stock in a private company. Unless the minority owner obtains a redemption agreement (or some other contractual right to exit the business) at the time that the interest is purchased (or received), the owner lacks the right to choose when he/she can later "monetize" the interest. Further in the absence of a redemption agreement with the company or other shareholders, the company and the other shareholders have no obligation to buy the minority shareholder's stock. This leaves the minority shareholder with no option to dispose of the shares and stuck on the sidelines hoping for a liquidity event such as a sale of the business, a merger, or an Initial Public Offering (IPO).

This article focuses on the conflicts that arise between and among minority and majority owners of privately-held Texas companies. In this troubled economy, lawsuits filed by minority shareholders, as well as by limited partners and LLC members, of private companies against general partners and controlling owners appear to be increasing, but this spate of lawsuits is only now reaching the appellate courts. As Texas courts grapple with these oppression and breach of fiduciary duty claims by minority owners, they are reexamining and developing new legal principles regarding the rights minority owners and corresponding duties of the majority owners in private companies.

Although this article does not include a statistical analysis of the perceived trend of increasing cases filed by minority owners, the common sense explanation for this increase is that a struggling economy eliminates, or sharply reduces, the prospect for minority owners in private companies to cash out. As a result, many investors/owners in private businesses have become frustrated by the structural and economic inability to monetize their investments. In the wake of this frustration, and after concluding that their right have been violated by majority owners who abused their control of the business to operate the company in a manner that is hostile to and oppressive of the minority owners, these minority investors are turning to the courts.[1]

[1] For the purposes of this article, the assumption is made that the minority owner does not have a shareholder's agreement or any other contractual right that would force a buyout of his or its interest by the majority owners for the fair value of that interest.

This overview paints a grim picture for minority investors in private companies, but all hope is not lost for minority investors in Texas who did not obtain a redemption agreement before they invested. Under Section 11.404, of the Texas Business Organizations Code, Texas courts are authorized to dissolve private companies or appoint receivers when majority owners – "those in control" -- engage in oppressive conduct. Based on this statute, courts have provided equitable remedies to minority shareholders, including forced buyouts of their stock if they can establish that they were "oppressed" by the majority shareholder(s). In these limited circumstances, Texas courts have recognized a cause of action for shareholder oppression, and minority shareholders have secured court-ordered remedies that provide them with value for their ownership interest in the company.[2] The law in Delaware, however, is less favorable for minority shareholders. No similar Delaware statute exists that supports the award of equitable remedies to minority shareholders who have been oppressed by the company's majority owners. As a result, whether a claim for shareholder oppression exists under Delaware law is a matter of debate.

B. THE CLOSELY HELD (PRIVATE) CORPORATION

The minority shareholder oppression scenario arises uniquely in the context of a private company, including the close corporation. An investor in a publicly-held corporation can feel oppressed, i.e., that his investment goals are being thwarted by management. The public company investor has a readily available exit, however, because his/her shares can be sold in the public market.[3] By contrast and as noted, a shareholder in a private company lacks this option, because no market typically exists for the shares of a private company. Moreover, in many private companies, all shareholders are required to sign an agreement with other shareholders that restricts the sale or transfer of their stock. The non-marketable nature of a private company investment makes it possible for controlling shareholders to "squeeze out" the minority shareholder from the company's management and operations, while also "freezing out" the minority owner out of realizing any other monetary benefits from his or her ownership interest.

By definition, a minority shareholder, minority member of an LLC and limited partner lacks control over the business. In the corporate context, shareholders elect the board of directors, which gives the majority shareholder the right to control the board and, among other things: (i) select the officers, (ii) set officer compensation, (iii) determine whether the company will issue any dividends and, if so, (iv) how much of a dividend to issue. In the LLC context, the majority members have the power to appoint the managers and achieve the same results described above. The majority shareholder(s) or LLC member(s) can deny the minority owner the right to participate in the management of the business, and the right to share in the financial success of the business on a current basis (i.e., the denial of dividends).

---

[2] As discussed more fully below, a shareholder oppression case is the subject of an appeal currently pending before the Texas Supreme Court, which was argued in February 2013. See Ritchie v. Rupe, 339 S.W.3d 275 (Tex. App.—Dallas 2011, pet. granted). The Rupe case is being closely observed as lawyers and businesspeople are eager to learn whether the Court will uphold the claim for minority shareholder oppression under Texas law and, if so, how the Court will define (or alter) the elements of this claim.

[3] The minority shareholder in a public company may also have a variety of state and federal securities claims to pursue, but these claims are beyond the scope of this article.

In a limited partnership, the operational control belongs to the general partner. The limited partners are not generally active in the business, although the limited partnership act does allow limited partners some leeway, including the ability to consult with (and advise) general partners and to also call, attend and participate in meetings with both the limited and the general partners. TEX. BUS. ORG. CODE § 153.103.

In most cases, the successful functioning of a private corporation, LLC or limited partnership depends on the relationship of trust that exists among the owners of the business and the way in which they run the company and share in its financial success. When the majority owners abuse their power and control over the company, trust ends and problems follow. This is an especially tenuous situation for a spouse who acquires his/her minority interest in the business in a divorce settlement or divorce decree when the other spouse is a longtime insider and the other, majority shareholders side with the spouse who is the company employee.

C. REVIEW OF THE CLAIM FOR MINORITY SHAREHOLDER OPPRESSION UNDER TEXAS STATUES AND APPLICABLE CASE AUTHORITIES

Minority shareholders in a Texas private company may prevail on a claim for shareholder oppression if they can establish that the controlling, majority shareholders exploited their power to deny the minority owners the right to share in the company's financial returns. The claim for minority shareholder oppression and resulting equitable remedies was judicially recognized by Texas courts more than 20 years ago (and also exists in other jurisdictions), but the contours of the claim continue to develop in recent case law.[4] The origins of the oppression claim (and statute) date all the way back to the 1950's, but the Texas Supreme Court recently granted review in a shareholder oppression case where the trial court awarded a mandatory buyout of the minority shareholder's ownership interest. Ritchie v. Rupe, 339 S.W.3d 275 (Tex. App.—Dallas 2011, pet. granted).

1. The Oppression Statute and Equitable Remedies in Texas

The starting point for the assertion of an oppression claim is found in Texas statutes. The Texas Legislature enacted several statutes in 1955 to address "illegal, oppressive, or fraudulent" actions by controlling shareholders in closely-held corporations.[5] The oppression statute is now found in Section 11.404 of the Texas Business Organizations Code. Notably, Section 11.404 provides, in certain circumstances, that an oppressed minority shareholder has a statutory right to obtain relief from the majority shareholder's oppressive conduct. See TEX. BUS. ORG. CODE § 11.404. This statute also authorizes a Texas trial court to appoint a receiver, or to order that the company be liquidated when there is a showing of "illegal, oppressive or fraudulent" conduct by the "governing persons" of the business entity. Id. § 11.404(a)(1)(C).

[4] Davis v. Sheerin, 754 S.W.2d 375, 377-80 (Tex. App.—Houston [1st Dist.] 1988, writ denied).

[5] The original oppression statute was codified in Articles 7.05 and 7.06 of the Texas Business Corporations Act and , as discussed above, it is currently found in section 11.404 of the Texas Business Organizations Code.

These remedies of court-ordered receiverships and liquidation that are authorized by this Texas statute, however, are often viewed as unduly harsh to the parties by trial judges, and as a result, these draconian remedies are therefore largely disfavored and rarely applied. When a private company is able to continue functioning – and particularly when the company is profitable – it is rarely viewed as a business that is ripe for the appointment of a receiver, or appropriate to be subject to a court-ordered liquidation that puts the company out of business. Before appointing a receiver, the Texas statute requires a trial court to consider where "all other available legal and equitable remedies . . . are inadequate." Id. at § 11.404(b)(3). For that reason, trial courts will often craft an "equitable" remedy that includes a mandatory dividend to the minority shareholder or to issue a preliminary injunction that will preserve the status quo (and the company's existing management) until a trial can be held on the merits of the minority shareholder's claims.

2. Shareholder Oppression Defined by Texas Courts

Due to the limited relief available to oppressed minority shareholders in Texas statutes, case law has developed in Texas to provide additional remedies to minority shareholders who can prove that the majority shareholders have engaged in oppressive conduct. A claim for oppression is based on tort, but there is no single set of definitive actions that constitute oppression. A minority shareholder in Texas can file a lawsuit against the majority shareholders alleging oppression when the minority owner can establish facts that meet one of the definitions of oppression below:

(1) majority shareholder's conduct that substantially defeats the minority's expectations that, objectively viewed, were both reasonable under the circumstances and central to the minority shareholder's decision to join the venture; or

(2) burdensome, harsh and wrongful conduct; a lack of probity and fair dealing in the company's affairs to the prejudice of some members; or a visible departure from the standards of fair dealing and a violation of fair play on which each shareholder is entitled to rely.[6]

This two-part test for oppression comes from a key Texas case, Davis v. Sheerin,[7] which relies on language from Articles 7.05 and 7.06 of the Texas Business Corporations Act (now Section 11.404 of the Texas Business Organizations Code discussed above). Davis adopted the doctrine of minority shareholder oppression and held that the statute authorizes court-ordered equitable remedies. In Davis, the appellate court upheld a jury verdict of oppressive conduct, based on: (i) findings of a conspiracy by the majority shareholders to deprive the plaintiff of his ownership interest in the corporation, (ii) findings that the majority shareholders wasted

[6] Davis, 754 S.W.2d at 381-82; see also Gimpel v. Bolstein, 477 N.Y.S.2d 1014, 1017-18 (N.Y. Sup. 1984).

[7] 754 S.W.2d at 382-83. The Davis court crafted a court-ordered buy-out of the plaintiff's stock at fair value, as an acceptable "less harsh" remedy to the statutorily authorized liquidation, available to the court under its "general equity powers" when "oppressive conduct" had occurred. Id. at 378, 380, 382-83.

corporate funds and received dividends that were withheld from the plaintiff, and (iii) undisputed evidence that the plaintiff would be denied any future voice in the corporation's management.

For more than two decades, Texas appellate courts have consistently looked to and upheld the holding of Davis in defining shareholder oppression and considering the equitable remedies that are available to the trial court under Section 11.404, of the Texas Business Organizations Code. A review of Texas law since the opinion in Davis was issued reflects that more than 25 reported decisions in 11 of the 14 Texas appellate districts that have upheld minority shareholder oppression as a viable cause of action.[8] Federal courts also recognize this claim under Texas law.[9]

3. The Origins of Oppression Claims in Texas

In developing the two-part test, the Davis court also cited to and relied on the Texas Supreme Court's holding in *Patton v. Nichola*s, which first examined the shareholder oppression claim (and related statutes) in 1955.[10] When the Texas Supreme Court issued Patton, the Texas Legislature was enacting Articles 7.05 and 7.06 of the Texas Business Corporations Act (now Section 11.404 of the Texas Business Organizations Code) to address oppressive or fraudulent actions by controlling shareholders in closely-held corporations.

The Patton case involved the Machinery Sales & Supply Company in Dallas. The company's owner hired two employees in 1940 and later gave them both a 20% ownership interest. From 1940 to 1945, the company generated revenues of more than $1 million with [8] See, e.g., Redmon v. Griffith, 202 S.W.3d 225, 234-35 (Tex. App.—Tyler 2006, pet. denied) (holding that individual minority shareholders had standing to sue majority shareholders for shareholder oppression); Hoggett v. Brown, 971 S.W.2d 472, 488 n.13 (Tex. App.—Houston [14th Dist.] 1997, pet. denied) (recognizing various theories of shareholder oppression as claims by individual shareholders against the oppressive majority shareholder); Davis, 754 S.W.2d at 382-83 (noting oppression demonstrated by acts of the oppressive majority shareholder, against whom the individual shareholder plaintiff's claims were proper); Willis v. Bydalek, 997 S.W.2d 798, 801 (Tex. App.—Houston [1st Dist.] 1999, pet. denied) (permitting shareholder oppression claim by 49% minority shareholder against majority shareholder, but finding that minority shareholder failed to demonstrate oppressive conduct).

---

[9] See Bulacher v. Enowa, LLC, No. 3:10-CV-156, 2010 WL 1135958, at *2 (N.D. Tex., Mar. 23, 2010) (Lynn, J.) (citing Davis and holding: "Texas courts take a broad view of the application of oppressive conduct to a closely-held corporation . . . [and] the facts alleged by [the minority shareholder] are sufficient to state a claim for shareholder oppression under Texas law"); In re Rosenbaum, No. 09-4023, 2010 WL 1856344, at *7 (Bankr. E.D. Tex. May 7, 2010) (citing Davis and holding that "[w]ith respect to [plaintiff's] claim for minority shareholder oppression, there is no set standard for determining whether shareholder oppression has occurred. Rather, the Court must examine the facts as a whole and determine whether the corporation's conduct has deprived a minority shareholder of the shareholder's reasonable expectations as an equity holder of the corporation"); see also In re Mandel, No. 10-40219, 2011 WL 4599969, at *23-24 (Bankr. E.D. Tex. Sept. 30, 2011).

[10] Patton v. Nicholas, 279 S.W.2d 848, 855-57 (Tex. 1955). The Patton Court highlighted the "new and elaborate" statute that oppression by majority shareholders and commented "that its approach to this type of [oppression] case is one of 'rehabilitation' in preference to dissolution and liquidation." Id. at 854 (citing Articles 7.05-09 of the Texas Business Corporations Act).

annual net profits of more than $100,000. The minority shareholders also received "relatively frequent and substantial" dividends until disputes arose among the owners—and the two minority shareholders left the company in December 1945. In the following five years (1946-1950), the company generated similar revenues (more than $1 million), but after the minority shareholders left the company the company's books showed a sharp drop in profits and no further dividends were paid to the minority owners.

The minority shareholders in Patton therefore brought suit for an accounting and seeking liquidation of the company. At trial, multiple witnesses testified that the majority shareholders had withhold dividends so the minority shareholders "don't make a penny out of this business." The trial court ordered liquidation and the court of appeals agreed that the company should be liquidated. The Patton Court viewed liquidation as an "extreme" remedy, but concluded that the majority shareholder's "malicious suppression of dividends is a wrong akin to a breach of trust, for which the courts will afford a remedy." Rather than liquidating a profitable company, however, the Patton Court ordered the corporation (and its controlling majority shareholder) to pay a reasonable dividend "at the earliest practicable date," as well as in future years.

4. Minority Shareholder Oppression Returns to the Texas Supreme Court—More Than 55 Years Later

The Texas Supreme Court had not addressed the shareholder oppression claim (or statute) since Patton in 1955, or more recently, since Davis v. Sheerin was decided in 1988. Almost six decades after Patton, however, the Texas Supreme Court granted review of a shareholder oppression case. In February 2013, the Texas Supreme Court heard oral argument in Ritchie v. Rupe, 339 S.W.3d 275 (Tex. App.—Dallas 2011, pet. granted). In Ritchie, the minority shareholder wanted to sell her shares to a third party, but the third party requested the opportunity to meet with the majority owners of the business before purchasing her minority interest, which is typical in a due diligence process. The majority shareholders refused to meet with—or provide information to—the potential buyers of her stock. Left with no ability to sell her shares to a third party, the minority shareholder filed suit claiming oppression.

The jury made findings supporting an oppression determination, and the trial court ordered the majority owners to buy the minority shareholder's stock at a "fair value" of more than $7 million. The Dallas Court of Appeals then determined that the majority shareholders' conduct was oppressive under both tests set forth in Davis because: (1) the company's policies constructively prohibited the minority shareholder from selling her shares "would substantially defeat the shareholder's general reasonable expectation of being able to market her unrestricted stock;" and (2) the majority shareholders (and directors) departed from the "standards of fair dealing" by refusing to meet with prospective purchasers of the minority shareholder's stock.

The Texas Supreme Court oral argument in Rupe was notably active as all Justices asked pointed questions of counsel. The Court did not provide signs, that allow its holding to predicted with confidence, but we do not expect the Court to reject the shareholder oppression doctrine. A holding that overturns Davis v. Sheerin would also reject and upend more than 25 years of case law that has consistently followed and adopted the Davis holding. To the extent that the Court concludes, however, that the legal standards governing oppression are murky, the Court may address and refine the standards that currently apply to oppression claims.

5. Other Recent Shareholder Oppression Cases in Texas Courts

The Rupe case is hardly an isolated instance as a number of Texas courts have issued opinions relating to minority shareholder disputes. Two recent cases from the Dallas Court of Appeals (reviewing trial court and jury findings); one case from the Houston Court of Appeals (legal questions on summary judgment) are reviewed below.

a. Recent Cases from the Dallas Court of Appeals

In the last two years, two different panels from the Dallas Court of Appeals have issued conflicting opinions regarding the standards that apply to shareholder oppression claims.

Cardiac Perfusion. In July 2012, the Dallas Court of Appeals affirmed the jury's verdict and concluded that the majority shareholder engaged in oppression. The Court upheld the equitable remedy awarding a redemption of the minority's shares at fair value (i.e. excluding discounts for lack of control). See Cardiac Perfusion Servs., Inc. v. Hughes, 380 S.W.3d 198 (Tex. App.—Dallas 2012, pet. filed). The minority shareholder in Cardiac Perfusion owned 10% of the business (where he had worked for over 20 years) and was later fired by the majority shareholder. Both the trial and appellate courts concluded that the majority shareholder engaged in oppression in which he (1) "suppressed payment of profit distributions;" (2) "paid himself excessive compensation;" (3) "improperly paid his family members;" (4) "used [corporate] funds to pay personal expenses;" and (5) "refused to let [the minority] examine [the company's] books and records." The court also used the "enterprise value" method to value the 10% interest (as opposed to discounts under "fair value) because the minority shareholder had been "forced to relinquish his ownership position by the oppressive conduct of the majority [shareholder]." In February 2013, the majority shareholder filed a petition for review with the Texas Supreme Court in Case No. 13-0014.

Argo Data. In late August 2012, the Dallas Court of Appeals reversed a trial court (and extensive jury findings) supporting a one-time dividend award of $85 million from the company's large cash hoard of retained earnings. The trial court had awarded the dividend to be split between the majority owner (53%) and the minority owner (47%). See Argo Data Resource Corp. v. Shagrithaya, 380 S.W.3d 249 (Tex. App.—Dallas 2012, pet. filed). In Argo Data, the trial court's judgment was based on the results of a six-week trial where the jury found the majority shareholder (1) refused to pay dividends from a stockpile of $140 million of retained earnings as part of a "freeze out" scheme; (2) committed fraud by giving false information to the minority shareholder; and (3) unilaterally cut the salary of the minority shareholder by 70% without board approval and in a year of record profits; (4) obstructed potential opportunities for the minority shareholder to sell his shares to third parties; and (5) used corporate funds for personal use (i.e., travel expenses; family expenses; condominium purchase). On appeal, the Argo Data panel held despite the jury findings, there was no oppression because either: (1) there was no harm to the minority shareholder because the company's value increased during the scheme; or (2) the majority shareholder remedied other oppressive acts "before trial." In late 2012, the minority shareholder filed a petition for review with the Texas Supreme Court.

b. Recent Case from Houston Court of Appeals

Another significant minority owner case from the Houston Court of Appeals did not involve a review of lengthy jury trials like in Cardiac Perfusion and Argo Data, but it presented similar factual claims with slightly different legal issues.

Devon Energy. In March 2012, the Houston Court of Appeals recognized and imposed a formal fiduciary duty on a sole majority member (and sole manager) of a closely-held oil and gas company in the context of a redemption of shares owned by a minority member. See Allen v. Devon Energy Holdings, LLC, 367 S.W.3d 355, (Tex. App.—Houston [1st Dist.] 2012, pet. granted, judgm't vacated w.r.m.). The decision in Devon Energy provides important guidance for majority (or controlling) owners when providing information to minority members as part of a "buyout" or purchase of their ownership interest. The crux of the Devon Energy case concerned fiduciary duties in a Texas LLC, however, both the trial and appeals court dismissed the oppression claim by noting: "[the] conduct alleged . . . is not the typical wrongdoing in shareholder oppression cases: [the plaintiff] was not a terminated employee; [the minority member] was not denied access to company books or records; and there was no allegation that [the controlling member] wrongfully withheld dividends, wasted corporate funds, paid himself excessive compensation, or locked [the minority member] out of the corporate offices." Given the absence of those facts (similar to Cardiac Perfusion and Argo Data above), the court in Devon Energy focused on whether a majority member might owe fiduciary duties in the context of a redemption or sale.

The dispute in Devon Energy arose when the majority member offered to purchase the minority shareholders' stock at $1.13 million per 1% ownership interest. This offer came in November 2003 and the majority member provided a valuation and certain representations to the minority members (i.e. future projects for the oil company would be "non-economic" and that he would spend less time with the company). The deal did not close until eight months later in June 2004 where the minority member received $8 million for the entirety of his ownership interest. But two years later, the company sold for over $1 billion dollars and the minority member's stock would have been worth $160 million.

The LLC's minority member filed suit alleging, among other things, that representations made in the November 2003 letter were fraudulent and that the majority had a fiduciary duty to disclose material changes (i.e. significant technological advances and lease purchases) that occurred in the eight months between the "offer" and the ultimate "redemption." The Devon Energy court addressed other issues, but agreed with the minority member that the November 2003 representations could support a fraudulent inducement claim and that the majority shareholder owed a specific fiduciary duty to the minority shareholder (in the context of the redemption). In late 2012, with a petition for review pending in the Texas Supreme Court, the parties settled the lawsuit and the Houston Court of Appeals' opinion continues to provide guidance on fiduciary duties in a closely-held company in Texas.

D. MINORITY SHAREHOLDER OPPRESSION CLAIMS AGAINST MAJORITY SHAREHOLDERS UNDER DELAWARE LAW

1. Introduction

Delaware is often portrayed as a "safe haven" by defense counsel. Indeed, it is common for Texas transactional attorneys to urge their majority shareholder clients to form private companies in Delaware based on the view that, under Delaware law, the majority owners are immune from oppression claims.[11] This view is based on the fact that Delaware has not enacted a "receivership" or "oppression" statute that addresses oppression (or remedies for such actions) in a closely-held corporation.

It should be noted, however, that while the case law is not extensive, Delaware courts have recognized a claim for shareholder oppression (starting in 1991), and no Delaware court has overtly rejected oppression as a valid cause of action since that time. Nevertheless, it is more common for Delaware courts to evaluate oppression claims under a standard similar to a "breach of fiduciary duty" when the minority shareholder alleges oppressive conduct.

2. Fiduciary Duties of Majority Shareholders in Delaware

In Delaware, minority shareholders confront two issues in bringing claims against a majority shareholder: (1) the Delaware courts' resistance—under certain circumstances—to accept the cause of action for shareholder oppression; and (2) differing standards of review (and shifting burdens of proof) for a breach of fiduciary duty claim against the controlling shareholder(s). Most minority shareholder plaintiffs bring claims for breach of fiduciary duties in efforts to secure a review of their claims under the "entire fairness" doctrine which requires the majority shareholders to demonstrate the fairness—in terms of price and dealing—of their conduct rather than under the "business judgment rule" that gives the majority shareholders far more latitude in their decision-making.

Under Delaware law, the business judgment rule is a "presumption that in making a business decision the directors of a corporation acted on an informed basis, in good faith and in the honest belief that the action was taken in the best interest of the company."[12] This standard is intended to prevent trial courts from substituting their judicial assessment for the business judgment of the majority shareholder (or the board of directors) as long as the challenged decision can be "attributed to any rational business purpose."[13]

In turn, a minority shareholder plaintiff must "rebut" the business judgment presumption by showing that the majority shareholder either: (i) had a personal interest in the subject matter of the action; (ii) was not fully informed in approving the action; or (iii) did not act in good faith

---

[11] Under the law of the forum doctrine, oppression claims by minority shareholders against majority shareholders will be governed by the state of incorporation.

[12] See Carsanaro v. Bloodhound Technologies, Inc., 2013 WL 1104901, at *10 (Del. Ch. Mar. 15, 2013) (quoting Aronson v. Lewis, 473 A.2d 805, 812 (Del. 1984)).

[13] See, e.g., Sinclair Oil Corp. v. Levien, 280 A.2d 717, 720 (Del. 1971).

in approving the action.[14] If the minority shareholder can rebut the business judgment presumption, then Delaware courts apply the "entire fairness" standard which places the burden on the majority shareholders (defendants) to prove that the complained of actions or transaction was entirely fair to the business as a whole. This standard is similar to the "entire fairness" prong followed by Texas courts in evaluating shareholder oppression claim.

In Delaware, the majority shareholder defendant must prove two elements: (i) "fair dealing" and (ii) "fair price" to defeat the plaintiff's claim.[15] With the first element of "fair dealing," Delaware courts consider when the transaction occurred; how it was structured and negotiated; the nature of disclosures to other shareholders; and how the approvals of the directors and stockholders was obtained.[16] The second element of "fair price" considers the economic and financial components of the transaction or decision including the market price; the company's assets; future prospects for the company; and other elements that might impact the value of the shareholder's stock.[17] Both elements are considered together to determine the "entire fairness" and these same rule apply to minority stockholders of closely-held corporations in Delaware

In late April 2013, a Delaware court explained again that it considers "[t]he protections afforded to minority stockholders in closely-held corporations under Delaware common law are no different than those in publicly-held corporations."[18] The Blaustein court continued that although other jurisdictions have recognized special fiduciary duties among stockholders in closely-held corporations, the Delaware courts have not adopted a similar approach.[19] Instead, utilizing general corporate law principles, Delaware courts have mostly relied on entire fairness as a means of protecting minority stockholders. But a careful review of Delaware law reveals that a claim for shareholder oppression might still exist—even if few Delaware courts have squarely addressed the issue.

3. Delaware Courts Might Recognize a Shareholder Oppression Claim

While a fair reading of Delaware law indicates that courts in that state are less receptive—compared to Texas courts—to minority shareholder oppression claims, the contention by some defense counsel that minority shareholder oppression is not a valid claim under Delaware law overstates the case. This argument by defense counsel relies on dicta from just one Delaware case, Nixon v. Blackwell,[20] that approved a "liquidity disparity" between controlling and minority shareholders, but did not consider—nor expressly reject—the

---

[14] See In re Synthes, Inc. Shareholder Litig., 50 A.3d 1022 & n. 57 (Del. Ch. 2012).

[15] See Reis v. Hazelett Strip-Casting, Corp., 28 A.3d 442, 462 (Del. Ch. 2011) (citing Weinberger v. UOP, Inc., 457 A.2d 701, 711 (Del. 1983)).

[16] See Americas Mining Corp. v. Theriault, 51 A.3d 1213, 1238 (Del. 2012) (citing Weinberger v. UOP, Inc., 457 A.2d 701, 711 (Del. 1983)).

[17] Id. at 1243-44.

[18] Blaustein v. Lord Baltimore Capital Corp., 2013 WL 1810956, at *14 (Del. Ch. Apr. 30, 2013).

[19] Id. at *14 (noting that Delaware courts do not follow New York or Massachusetts in recognizing a claim for shareholder oppression)

[20] Nixon v. Blackwell, 626 A.2d 1366 (Del. 1993).

"reasonable expectations" standard announced just one year earlier in Litle v. Waters.[21] Indeed, since the Nixon Court issued its decision in 1993, Delaware courts (and federal courts applying Delaware law) have continued to recognize Litle as the defining legal standard when analyzing a minority shareholder's claim for oppressive conduct.[22]

In light of Nixon and its progeny, however, minority shareholders who invest in Delaware companies are well-advised to secure a shareholders agreement at the time of their investment. A shareholders agreement will provide minority shareholders with, among other things, a critical right of redemption for the fair (undiscounted) value of their stock in the event they experience oppressive conduct by the majority shareholders.

4. Fractured Foundation Of Minority Shareholder Claims in Delaware

Starting in the early 1990's, Delaware courts adopted a varied stance toward the existence of a cause of action for minority shareholder oppression. A 1992 decision held that this cause of action existed; but a 1993 court hinted it might not, and the law has remained unsettled two decades later. The three Delaware cases reviewed below demonstrate the split view that now exists in Delaware regarding law applicable to claims by minority shareholders against the controlling shareholders arising from oppressive conduct.

a. Litle v. Waters*: Minority Shareholder Prevails On Claims For Breach Of Fiduciary Duty and Shareholder Oppression.

Initially, in Litle v. Waters, the Delaware Court of Chancery considered a minority shareholder plaintiff's two claims for breach of fiduciary duty and shareholder oppression, both arising from the majority shareholders' refusal to declare dividends despite the company's profitable status—which created a significant tax burden on the plaintiff.[23] For the breach of fiduciary duty claim, the Litle court noted "an important issue" was that both controlling directors were "interested directors" which triggered a judicial review under the more stringent "entire fairness" standard. Under this standard, "the burden shifts to the defendants to demonstrate that the decision to not declare dividends and to repay the company's debt to [a [21] See CA No. 12155, 1992 WL 25758, at *6 (Del. Ch. Feb. 11, 1992) (citing Gimpel v. Bolstein, 477 N.Y.S.2d 1014, 1018-19 (N.Y. Sup. 1984)).

---

[22] See, e.g., Orloff v. Shulman, No. Civ. 852-N, 2005 WL 3272355, at *8 n.52 (explaining that Litle is "[t]he only Delaware case that squarely addressed the issue of [shareholder] oppression"); In re Marriott Hotel Props. II Ltd. P'ship, No. Civ. 14961, 2000 WL 128875, at *13 (Del. Ch. Jan. 24, 2000) (recognizing application of Litle to minority shareholder's claim that "defendant had frozen dividends in order to effectuate an oppressive squeeze-out"); In re Skyport Global Commc'ns, Inc., No. 10-03150, 2011 WL 111427, at *35 (Bankr. S.D. Tex. Jan. 13, 2011) (applying Delaware law) (citing Litle and stating that "Delaware courts have recognized oppression as a cause of action") (emphasis in original); Reserve Solutions Inc. v. Vernaglia, 438 F.Supp.2d 280, 290 (S.D.N.Y. 2006) (applying Delaware law) (approving Litle and denying motion to dismiss shareholder oppression claim); Minor v. Albright, No. 01-C-4493, 2001 WL 1516729, at *2-3 (N.D. Ill. Nov. 28, 2001) (applying Delaware law) (recognizing definition of oppressive shareholder conduct from Litle and denying motion to dismiss plaintiff's claims that majority shareholder "attempted to freeze them out").

[23] See 1992 WL 25758, at *3, *6.

majority shareholder] was intrinsically fair."[24] By contrast, the majority shareholders sought review under the business judgment rule that defers to the business decisions of the controlling shareholders.[25] The Litle court refused to apply the deferential business judgment rule, and declined to accept the defendants' argument that the declaration of a dividend was solely within the majority shareholders' business discretion.[26]

The second claim in Litle was for shareholder oppression where the plaintiff alleged that the director defendants' refusal to declare dividends (causing the minority shareholder to bear a high tax burden) constituted "a gross and oppressive abuse of discretion."[27] The Litle court held that the minority shareholder's claim "includes allegations sufficient to state a claim for oppression,"[28] and also reasoned that the failure to pay dividends "can be especially devastating [to the minority shareholder]."[29] After noting that few Delaware cases had addressed oppressive shareholder conduct, the Litle Court applied standards from a New York case defining oppression as: (1) "a violation of the 'reasonable expectations' of the minority;" and (2) "burdensome, harsh and wrongful conduct."[30] The Litle court then explained that neither shareholder expected their stock to become "a liability" (caused by a tax burden when no dividends were paid) and the plaintiff's claims set forth "a classic squeeze out situation" that constituted shareholder oppression.[31]

b. Nixon v. Blackwell: Delaware Supreme Court's Limited Holding Related to Breach of Fiduciary Duty

Just 16 months after Litle, the Delaware Supreme Court pivoted toward a contract-focused approach to the rights of minority shareholder in Nixon v. Blackwell.[32] In Nixon, the Supreme Court considered the narrow issue of a minority shareholder's claim for breach of fiduciary duty where, importantly, the plaintiff did not plead a separate claim for shareholder oppression.[33] The Delaware Supreme Court took a less protective stance toward the minority shareholders in discussing the fiduciary duties of majority shareholders, and suggested that all [24] Id. at *5 (citing Weinberger v. Uop, 457 A.2d 701, 703 (Del. 1983)).

[25] Id. at *4 (noting that defendants "imply that the business judgment standard applies").

[26] Id. at *3.

[27] Id. at *6.

[28] Id. at *7 (noting that minority shareholder plaintiff alleged in complaint that "the company was rich with cash and that the only reason that the company did not make dividends was to aid [the majority shareholder] to buy [the minority shareholder] out for less than fair value").

[29] Id. at *9.

[30] Id. at * 7-8 (citing Gimpel v. Bolstein, 477 N.Y.S.2d 1014, 1018-19 (N.Y. Sup. 1984); see also Orloff v. Shulman, No. Civ. 852-N, 2005 WL 3272355, at *8 n.52 (Del. Nov. 23, 2005) (explaining that Litle is "[t]he only Delaware case that squarely addressed the issue of [shareholder] oppression").

[31] Id. at *8.

[32] 626 A.2d 1366 (Del. 1993)

[33] Id. at 1374 ("The only issue before this Court is the ruling by the trial court . . . that the defendants breached their fiduciary duties by failing to provide a parity of liquidity.").

protections or rights of shareholders should be defined by contract, not through judicial remedies.[34]

In Nixon, the minority shareholders alleged that the majority shareholder directors had breached their fiduciary duties by creating a "liquidity disparity" in two different ways by: (1) creating an Employee Stock Ownership Plan ("ESOP") that allowed only certain employees the ability liquidate their stock; and (2) funding a "Key Man" insurance plan in which proceeds of the policy would be pay off corporate debts, but also trigger the purchase of a certain percentage of stock from the deceased (and remaining controlling) stockholders.[35] Simply put, the controlling shareholders enabled employees (through retirement) and directors (through the insurance policy) the ability to liquidate their shares, but did not provide minority shareholder plaintiffs with a similar right.

One similarity to Litle was the initial determination—for purpose of fiduciary duty analysis—that the majority shareholders in Nixon were "on both sides of the transaction" which caused the burden to shift to the majority shareholder defendants to show the "entire fairness" of the challenged transactions.[36] While the entire fairness standard generally requires a two-pronged inquiry into both the "fair price" and "fair dealing" of the challenged transaction,[37] the Nixon Court admitted that its analysis was limited "only [to] the issue of fair dealing."[38]

Initially, the Delaware trial court sided with the minority shareholders but, on appeal, the Delaware Supreme Court framed the issue as whether the majority shareholders "breached their fiduciary duties by failing to provide a parity of liquidity."[39] According to Nixon, under the entire fairness standard, the minority shareholders did not have "a right to 'liquidity' equal to [the majority shareholders]," and the Supreme Court said—in dicta—that it would not "fashion a [34] Id. at 1379 (discussing, in dicta, question "raised at oral argument" and casting doubt that "there should be any special, judicially-created rules to 'protect' minority shareholders of closely-held Delaware corporations") (citations omitted).

---

[35] Id. at 1371-73.

[36] Id. at 1375-76 (affirming trial court's application of "entire fairness" standard after noting that majority shareholders benefited from the challenged transactions "beyond that which benefitted other stockholders generally"). But where the majority shareholders implement certain procedural protections (through involvement of an independent committee or a majority vote of minority stockholders), the burden of proof under the "entire fairness" standard could shift back to the plaintiff. See, e.g., In re John Q. Hammons Hotels Inc. Shareholder Litig., No. 785-CC, 2009 WL 3165613, at *14 n.48 (Del. Ch. Oct. 2, 2009) ("Although the procedural protections in this case were not sufficient to invoke business judgment protection, they could have been sufficient to shift the burden of demonstrating entire fairness to the plaintiffs.").

[37] See Weinberger v. Uop, 457 A.2d 701, 711 (Del. 1983) (explaining the concept of "fair dealing" as concerning how "the transaction was timed, how it was initiated, structured, negotiated, disclosed to the directors, and how the approvals of the directors and the stockholders were obtained," and the "fair price" prong "relates to the economic and financial considerations of the proposed merger, including all relevant factors: assets, market value, earnings, future prospects, and any other elements that affect the intrinsic or inherent value of a company's stock"); see also In re Marriott Hotel Props, 2000 WL 128875, at *14 ("[T]he entire fairness test properly applies to protect minority shareholders from the tyranny of the controlling entity.").

[38] Nixon, 626 A.2d at 1376

[39] Id. at 1374.

special judicially-created rule for minority investors" because minority shareholders should negotiate for better rights:

> The tools of good corporate governance are designed to give a purchasing minority stockholder the opportunity to bargain for protection before parting with consideration. It would do violence to normal corporate practice . . . to fashion an ad hoc ruling which would result in a court-imposed stockholder buy-out for which the parties had not contracted.[40]

The Nixon Court did recognize that minority shareholders often lack the ability to sell their shares (without a market or market valuation), and are thus bound by the majority's consent.[41] After approving of a series of actions that benefited the majority shareholders (and disproportionately increased their ability to liquidate shares of stock), the Nixon Court explained that the minority shareholders were "entitled to be treated fairly, but not necessarily to be treated equally."[42] The solution, according to Nixon, for minority shareholders in Delaware is to "enter into definitive stockholder agreements . . . [that] provide for elaborate earnings tests, buy-out provisions, voting trusts, or other voting agreements."[43] For those reasons, the Nixon Court dismissed the minority shareholder's breach of fiduciary duty claims, but never explicitly considered—and never rejected—any cause of action for shareholder oppression, which was not plead as a cause of action in the plaintiff's complaint.

While the "entire fairness" standard is more exacting than the deferential business judgment rule,[44] the court's application of this higher standard does not necessarily assure victory for a minority shareholder plaintiff. In most instances, the plaintiff's path to the entire fairness standard involves either: (1) rebutting the "business judgment" rule; or (2) demonstrating that a controlling shareholder is engaging in self-dealing or other acts of bad faith.[45] Despite application of the more stringent standard of review, however, the Nixon Court approved the benefit plans adopted by the majority shareholders—relying exclusively on the "fair dealing" prong—even though the controlling shareholders were positioned to benefit

---

[40] Id. at 1379-80.

[41] Id. at 1379 (noting that "there is no market and no market valuation" and stating that "[i]t is not difficult to be sympathetic, in the abstract, to a stockholder who finds himself or herself in that position").

[42] Id.

[43] Id. at 1380.

[44] See Aronson v. Lewis, 473 A.2d 805, 812 (Del. 1984) (noting that business judgment rule is the default standard of review and presumes that "in making a business decision the directors of a corporation acted on an informed basis, in good faith, and in the honest belief that the action taken was in the best interests of the company"); see also Reis v. Hazelett Strip-Casting Corp., 28 A.3d 442, 457 (Del. Ch. 2011) (noting that, under business judgment rule, the decisions of controlling shareholders decisions will be upheld unless it cannot be attributed to "any rational purpose").

[45] See Cinerama, Inc. v. Technicolor, Inc., 663 A.2d 1156, 1162 (Del. 1995); see also Ebay Domestic Holdings, Inc. v. Newmark, 16 A.3d 1, 36-37 (Del. Ch. 2010) ("There are a number of ways that plaintiff can rebut the business judgment, including by showing that the majority of directors who approved the action (1) had a personal interest in the subject matter of the action; (2) were not fully informed in approving the action, and (3) did not act in good faith in approving the action.").

personally from the actions that the minority shareholder claimed constituted a freeze out.[46] In sum, the Nixon Court did not reject a cause of action for shareholder oppression (which was never pled), but the Delaware Supreme Court confirmed that majority shareholder defendants can meet their burden under the "entire fairness" standard to defeat a claim for breach of fiduciary duty.

c. Riblet Products v. Nagy: Delaware Supreme Court Narrowly Decides Certified Question from Seventh Circuit

Three years later, in Riblet Products v. Nagy, the Delaware Supreme Court considered a similar fiduciary duty issue in a case filed in federal court in Indiana (but governed by Delaware law).[47] On appeal, the Seventh Circuit certified a question to the Delaware Supreme Court asking "whether corporate law requires controlling shareholders to act as fiduciaries toward minority shareholder-employees."[48] The Seventh Circuit Court of Appeals confronted this issue of minority shareholder rights, but did not rely on – or even reference – the Nixon decision, and instead cited to another case, Ueltzhoffer v. Fox Fire Development Co., as the "closest approach" to the topic.[49]

In answering the certified question in Riblet, the Delaware Supreme Court did not confront the fiduciary duty issue, because the dispositive question turned on rights arising under an employment contract.[50] The Supreme Court therefore reformulated the certified question (focusing on the contract issue, not fiduciary duties),[51] and determined that the minority shareholder's "contractual rights are separate from his rights as a stockholder."[52] Still, the Riblet Court leaned closer to the decision issued in Litle—rather than its own opinion in Nixon—when it noted that "[t]o be sure," the majority stockholders "may well owe fiduciary duties" to the minority stockholder.[53]

In closing, three Delaware decisions — Litle, Nixon, and Riblet — have caused a number commentators to conclude that the existence of a cause of action for shareholder oppression

---

[46] Nixon, 626 A.2d at 1381.

[47] See Nagy v. Riblet Prods. Corp., 79 F.3d 572 (7th Cir. 1996).

[48] See Nagy, 79 F.3d at 573-74.

[49] Id. at 577 (citing Ueltzhoffer, No. 9871, 1991 WL 271584, at *8 (Del. Ch. Dec. 19, 1991) (concluding that majority stockholder did not terminate employment contract of minority shareholder "for the sole and improper purpose of freezing him out of the corporate entities")).

[50] 683 A.2d 37 (Del. 1993).

[51] Id. at 39 (narrowing the Seventh Circuit's certified question as "[w]hether majority stockholders of a Delaware corporation may be held liable for violation of a fiduciary duty to a minority stockholder who is an employee of the corporation under an employment contract with respect to issues involving that employment").

[52] Id. at 40

[53] Id.

remains an unsettled question.[54] But, Delaware courts have expressly noted that "under some circumstances," fiduciary duty law in Delaware recognizes a claim for oppression by minority shareholders.[55]

The Fifth Circuit also confirmed the uncertainty of Delaware law regarding minority shareholder claims when it stated that: "the Delaware Supreme Court has yet to consider the precise issue . . . whether a controlling shareholder is liable for actions taken with the purpose and effect of freezing out another shareholder."[56] Moreover, a sizable number of courts have explained that Delaware courts have not foreclosed a cause of action for all minority shareholder claims, including a freeze out in close corporations.[57]

5. Litigation of Minority Shareholder Claims In Delaware

Three basic points flow from the limited number of Delaware cases regarding claims for minority shareholder oppression: (1) minority shareholders should contract at the outset, if possible, to have the right to redeem—or secure a buyout of—their interest when on reasonable terms; (2) the standards for a shareholder oppression claim in Litle continue to be recognized by both Delaware and federal courts (applying Delaware law) and the "very strong dicta" [58] in Nixon has not foreclosed the assertion of oppression claims;[59] and (3) where a claim involves a breach of fiduciary duty, a plaintiff's allegation concerning the majority stockholder being "on both [54] See Robert A. Ragazzo, Toward a Delaware Common Law of Closely Held Corporations, 77 Wash. U.L.Q. 1099, 1150-51 (1999) (arguing that notwithstanding Nixon, "the death of special shareholder duties in Delaware corporations has been greatly exaggerated"); see also Jeffrey M. Leavitt, Burned Angels: The Coming Wave of Minority Shareholder Oppression Claims In Venture Capital Start-Up Companies, 6 N.C. J. L. & Tech. 223, 252-55 (2005) (endorsing the view that "Delaware's law has not yet weighed in on the question of shareholder oppression in close corporations").

---

[55] See Gagliardi v. TriFoods Int'l, Inc., 683 A.2d 1049, 1051 (Del. Ch. 1996) ("I need not address the general question whether Delaware fiduciary duty law recognizes a cause of action for oppression of minority shareholders; I assume for purposes of this motion, that under some circumstances it may."); see also Orloff v. Shulman, 2005 WL 3272355, at *8 n.52 (explaining that Litle is "[t]he only Delaware case that squarely addressed the issue of [shareholder] oppression"); see also In re Marriott Hotel Props. II Ltd. P'ship, No. Civ. 14961, 2000 WL 128875, at *13 (Del. Ch. Jan. 24, 2000) (recognizing application of Litle to minority shareholder's claim that "defendant had frozen dividends in order to effectuate an oppressive squeeze-out").

[56] See Hollis v. Hill, 232 F.3d 460, 469 & n.28 (5th Cir. 2000).

[57] See, e.g., Carstarphen v. Milsner, 693 F.Supp.2d 1247, 1250 (D. Nev. 2010) ("But the holding of Nixon did not entirely preclude the possibility of a direct cause of action for minority shareholders in at least some circumstances."); Clemmer v. Cullinane, 815 N.E.2d 651, 652-63 (Mass. 2004) (applying Delaware law) (holding that minority shareholder stated a claim for freezeout and "[d]espite the sweeping dicta, the Nixon decision did not preclude a cause of action for minority shareholder freezeout in close corporations."); Mroz v. Hoaloha Na Eha, Inc., 410 F.Supp.2d 919, 934-35 (D. Hi. 2005) (citing Clemmer with approval regarding limits of Nixon decision).

[58] S*ee Hollis v. Hill*, 232 F.3d 460, 469 n.28 (5th Cir. 2000) ("[T]he Delaware Supreme Court has yet to consider the precise issue . . . whether a controlling shareholder is liable for actions taken with the purpose and effect of freezing out another shareholder.").

[59] See supra at nn. 17, 25 & 50; see also Reserve Solutions Inc. v. Vernaglia, 438 F.Supp.2d 280, 290 (S.D.N.Y. 2006) (applying Delaware law) (approving Litle and denying motion to dismiss shareholder oppression claim); Minor v. Albright, No. 01-C-4493, 2001 WL 1516729, at *2-3 (N.D. Ill. Nov. 28, 2001) (applying Delaware law) (recognizing definition of oppressive shareholder conduct from Litle and denying motion to dismiss plaintiff's claims that majority shareholder "attempted to freeze them out").

sides" of a deal will warrant the application of the more subjective "entire fairness" standard which requires courts to review and consider the majority shareholder's "fair dealing" and whether a "fair price" was offered.

Thus, while most minority shareholder plaintiffs in Delaware will opt to bring a claim for breach of fiduciary duty, the potential for a separate cause of action for shareholder oppression continues to be viable despite the sweeping dicta in Nixon.

E. EXAMPLES OF OPPRESSIVE CONDUCT

One classic example of an oppression claim by the majority shareholder is the "freeze-out" or "squeeze out" scheme. A freeze out scheme often includes the following elements: the majority shareholder terminates the minority shareholder's employment without cause, removes the minority shareholder from the board or from all aspects of management, refuses to provide financial information to the minority, and refuse to declare dividends – all of which culminates in an offer from the majority shareholder to buy out the minority shareholder at an unfairly low price. Thus, under this scheme, the majority shareholder freezes the minority owner out of the business and leaves no tangible financial benefit available from his/her ownership interest.

To establish a claim for oppression, the minority shareholder will prove that the majority shareholder engaged in actions of the types listed below, although this is not an exhaustive list:

- Terminating the minority shareholder's employment without cause;
- Removing the minority shareholder from the board of directors;
- Removing the minority shareholder from management;
- Refusing to declare dividends when the company is profitable;
- Denying the minority shareholder access to information,
- Siphoning off earnings to the majority shareholder through de facto dividends or excessive compensation;
- Entering into favorable contracts with affiliates of the majority shareholder;
- Engaging in recapitalizations or mergers designed to dilute or eliminate the minority shareholder's interest;
- Usurping corporate opportunities;
- Using corporate assets for personal benefit; and/or
- Making loans to family members.

Not every example of the conduct listed above rises to the level of minority shareholder oppression. For example, terminating the employment of a minority shareholder who is an employee at-will does not automatically translate into a valid oppression claim. The threshold question of whether the majority shareholder engaged in oppression is a matter of law for the court to decide after the jury determines that all or some of these acts, or related oppressive conduct, took place. The Davis court held that "[a]lthough whether certain acts were performed is a question of fact, the determination of whether these acts constitute oppressive conduct is usually a question of law for the court."[60]

[60] 754 S.W.2d at 380.

Similarly, the First District Court of Appeals in Houston – one decade after its decision in Davis – placed limitations on shareholder oppression claims in Willis v. Bydalek.[61] In Willis, the corporation operated a nightclub that never earned a profit. Even though the majority shareholder removed the plaintiff from management, the court in Willis did not find sufficient evidence to support a finding of oppression—despite the jury's finding of a wrongful lock-out. The jury did not find that the majority had suppressed dividends because the company was never profitable and dividends were never distributed to any shareholders – either minority or majority.[62]

The court declined to hold that these acts were oppressive, and determined that the firing of the minority investor was not oppression, because he was an at-will employee without an employment contract.[63] The Willis decision set some boundaries on the shareholder oppression claim recognized in Davis, and stressed that "[c]ourts must exercise caution in determining what shows oppressive conduct."[64]

F. APPLICATION OF TEXAS BUSINESS ORGANIZATIONS CODE TO LIMITED PARTNERSHIP AND LIMITED LIABILITY COMPANY OPPRESSION CLAIMS

Before the effective date of the Texas Business Organizations Code,[65] limited partners facing oppression had to look to Section 8.02 of the Texas Revised Limited Partnership Act, and LLC members in a similar situation had to look to Article 2.02 of the Texas Limited Liability Act. Now both can look to the same statute – Section 11.314 of the Texas Business Organizations Code.

Section 11.314 is titled "Involuntary Winding Up and Termination of Partnership or Limited Liability Company" and provides a remedy similar to those in the former TBCA, upon which Davis was, in part, based. Section 11.314 allows for the judicial winding up and termination of a limited partnership upon application by a partner or member if the following standards are met:

> (1) a partner in the partnership if the court determines that: (A) the economic purpose of the partnership is likely to be unreasonably frustrated or (B) another partner has engaged in conduct relating to the partnership's business that makes it not reasonably practicable to carry on the business in partnership with that partner; or

---

[61] 997 S.W.2d 798 (Tex. App.—Houston [1st Dist.] 1999, pet. denied).

[62] Id. at 802.

[63] Id.

[64] Id. at 801 (citing McCauley v. Tom McCauley & Son, Inc., 724 P.2d 232, 237 (N.M. 1986)).

[65] The effective date of the Business Organizations Code is September 1, 2009.

(2) an owner of the partnership or limited liability company if the court determines that it is not reasonably practicable to carry on the entity's business in conformity with its governing documents.

The theory behind the limited partnership portion of this provision – that a court can dissolve a partnership when relations between the partners renders it impractical for the partnership to conduct business – was applied by an Illinois Appellate Court to compel dissolution of a partnership.[66] In Susman v. Venture, the general partners had a dispute with Susman, a limited partner, over the sale of the partnership assets. The general partners later removed Susman's name from the tax records and refused to provide him with any information. These acts were considered sufficient to justify judicial dissolution as a remedy for the aggrieved minority.

While the LLC portion of Section 11.314 has yet to be tested in Texas, it seems safe to predict that, upon proof of sufficient, valid evidence, the court would order liquidation. The members of an LLC, therefore, would likely be entitled to the same remedies as a minority shareholder upon a showing that the majority, controlling members engaged in oppressive conduct.

G. DEPARTURE FROM THE BUSINESS JUDGMENT RULE

In light of the general nature of the Texas statutes that empower shareholders in dire situations to dissolve private companies, it is not surprising that Texas courts have fashioned remedies for minority shareholders contending they have been oppressed by the majority owners. The "less harsh" non-dissolution remedies set forth in Davis are judicial in nature, and are not prescribed by statute. Nevertheless, these remedies continue to provide relief to minority shareholders who allege claims for minority shareholder oppression.

Before Davis, Texas courts had been reluctant to issue rulings that impacted the relationships among shareholders or partners and the entities in which they had invested. Courts would give great deference to company officers and directors under the "business judgment rule."[67] The long-standing existence of the business judgment rule led courts to adopt a hands-off approach to the business conduct of officers and directors under the common law rule that they "shall not be held liable for an honest mistake of judgment if he [they] acted with due care, in good faith, and in furtherance of a rational business purpose."[68]

While Davis did not seek to overturn the business judgment rule, the Texas minority shareholder oppression doctrine contains elements that conflict with the rule to some extent. In considering claims by minority shareholders alleging oppression, Texas courts have begun to scrutinize with less deference the actions of majority owners to determine whether they engaged in "burdensome, harsh, and wrongful conduct"[69] and to assess whether the majority owners' actions have thwarted the "reasonable expectations"[70] of the minority shareholders. The Fifth Circuit Court of Appeals, in Hollis v. Hill,[71] closely examined the application of the business judgment rule in a case where a controlling shareholder was clearly oppressing a frozen-out minority. The court stated that:

[66] Susman v. Venture, 114 Ill. App. 3d 668, 675 (Ill. App. Ct. 1982).

[67] Cates v. Sparkman, 11 S.W. 846, 849 (Tex. 1889).

[68] FDIC v. Wheat, 970 F.2d 124, 130-31 (5th Cir. 1992).

> [i]n the context of a closely held corporation, many classic business judgment decisions can also have a substantial and adverse affect on the 'minority's' interest as shareholder. Close corporations present unique opportunities for abuse because the expectations of shareholders in closely held corporations are usually different from those of shareholders in public corporations.[72]

The Hollis court affirmed the lower court's decision that required a buy-out of the minority's shares, based upon a finding of breach of fiduciary duty and oppressive conduct by the majority.

H. CLAIM FOR BREACH OF FIDUCIARY DUTIES

Minority investors in private companies have another avenue available to challenge the actions of majority/controlling owners in addition to a shareholder oppression claim. To the extent the majority shareholder or the general partner breaches his fiduciary duties, those acts would give rise to a separate tort claim. What remains unclear is whether the minority shareholder has a direct action for breach of fiduciary duty, or whether this claim must be brought as a derivative action by the investor in the name the corporate entity.

The longstanding general rule in Texas is that corporate officers and directors owe fiduciary duties solely to the entity itself, not to its individual shareholders.[73] Shareholders therefore lacked standing to enforce the fiduciary duties that officers and directors owe to the corporation, except through the vehicle of a derivative lawsuit that they filed on behalf of the corporation.[74]

Private companies present a different scenario, however, as borne out by cases that focus on this setting. Although the cases repeatedly affirm that a majority shareholder does not owe a fiduciary duty to other shareholders as a matter of law, a number of Texas cases have held that a fiduciary duty may arise in the closely held company context in which the "shareholders operate more as partners than in strict compliance with the corporate form."[75] When courts hold this

---

[69] Davis v. Sheerin, 754 S.W.2d 375, 377-80 (Tex. App.—Houston [1st Dist.] 1988, writ denied).

[70] Id.

[71] Hollis v. Hill, 232 F.3d 460 (5th Cir. 2000).

[72] Id. at 467.

[73] See Hoggett v. Brown, 971 S.W.2d 472, 488 (Tex. App.—Houston [14th Dist.] 1997, pet. denied).

[74] Faour v. Faour, 789 S.W.2d 620, 621-22 (Tex. App.—Texarkana 1990, writ denied).

[75] Willis v. Donnelly, 118 S.W.3d 10, 31-32 (Tex. App.—Houston [14th Dist.] 2003), rev'd on other grounds, 199 S.W.3d 262 (Tex. 2006).

duty runs directly from the majority shareholder to the minority shareholders, they allow for minority shareholders to asserts breach of fiduciary duty claims directly against the majority (controlling) shareholders.[76] Private, closely held companies can therefore constitute an exception to the general rule when courts hold that majority owners owe fiduciary duties directly to the minority shareholders. In Duncan v. Lichtenberger,[77] the Fort Worth Court of Appeals awarded damages to two minority shareholders who had never received compensation as officers or dividends as shareholders. The court noted that "[t]he breach of a fiduciary duty is the type of wrong for which the courts of this State will afford a remedy."[78]

In a related cause of action dating back more than 50 years, the Texas Supreme Court provided another avenue for relief to minority shareholders against majority owners. In Patton v. Nicholas, the Court held that the failure of a majority shareholder to declare dividends constituted fraud and an abuse of his controlling position.[79] The Court affirmed the jury's verdict, observing that "the malicious suppression of dividends is a wrong akin to a breach of trust, for which the courts will afford a remedy."[80] The Patton court issued an injunction requiring the corporation to pay a reasonable dividend "at the earliest practical date," as well as in future years.[81]

In a much more recent case, Allen v. Devon,[82] the Houston court of appeals created a new, but very narrow, fiduciary duty in the LLC context. The court there held that a controlling LLC member may owe a fiduciary duty to the minority member where the controlling member is redeeming the minority member's ownership interest. This duty arose because the controlling member has far greater access to information about the company and its true value. Underlying this decision, as well, is the fact that the minority member has no other realistic options for the sale of its minority interest.

In the partnership context, the Tyler Court of Appeals upheld a claim of oppression based upon a breach of fiduciary duties, even though the plaintiff was not a partner (and therefore lacked standing to assert a claim for breach of fiduciary duties).[83] The Cleaver court noted, however, that fiduciary duties would have to be weighed for a court to properly assess the policy

---

[76] Id. at 34-35; Joseph v. Koshy, No. 01-98-01432-CV, 2000 WL 124685, at *4 (Tex. App.—Houston [1st Dist.] Feb. 3, 2000, no pet).

[77] 671 S.W.2d 948 (Tex. App.—Fort Worth 1984, writ ref'd n.r.e.).

[78] Id. at 950.

[79] Patton v. Nicholas, 279 S.W.2d 848 (Tex. 1955).

[80] Id. at 854.

[81] Id. at 849.

[82] Allen v. Devon, et. al, -- S.W.3d ---, 2012 WL 876771 (Tex. App. – Hous. [1st Dist.] 2012, not pet. history).

[83] Cleaver v. Cleaver, 935 S.W.2d 491 (Tex.App.—Tyler 1996, no writ).

of the managing partner that was subject to challenge, i.e., retaining earnings rather than declaring distributions.[84]

I. REVIEW OF SHAREHOLDER DERIVATIVE CLAIMS

In light of the more frequent holdings by Texas cases that majority shareholders do not owe fiduciary duties to other shareholders and owe these duties solely to the company, minority shareholders will often file claims for breach of fiduciary duty in derivative lawsuits that are filed for the benefit of the company. Shareholder derivative actions are governed by statute.[85]

The problem for minority shareholders in pursuing derivative actions is that they may require adherence to multiple procedural hurdles, which include all of the following: (1) the shareholder must have had an ownership interest in the company at the time of the alleged wrong and also at the time the suit was filed, (2) the shareholder must be able to show that he can fairly and adequately represent the company in the derivative action, and (3) the shareholder must make a demand on the company to take action on the claim at issue in the derivative action and the company must refuse to do so before the shareholder files suit.[86] The shareholder's failure to comply with these procedural hurdles can result in the dismissal of the derivative lawsuit. Further, all of the recoveries that are obtained in the derivative lawsuit are recovered by and paid to the company, not to the shareholders who brought the derivative action.

Importantly, under the Texas Business Organizations Code, the majority of these procedural requirements that minority shareholders must comply with before filing a derivative action are eliminated if the entity involved is a closely held company.[87] Further, the statute also provides that "[i]f justice requires . . . a derivative proceeding brought by a shareholder of a closely held corporation may be treated by a court as a direct action brought by the shareholder for his own benefit."[88]

Based on this statute, a minority shareholder in a closely held company can file a lawsuit on his own behalf directly against the majority shareholder for breaches of fiduciary duty, but without having to comply with the procedural requirements that normally burden shareholders who want to bring derivative actions. In these derivative actions in the closely held company context, the minority shareholders will still need to name the company as a nominal defendant and the action must still proceed in the name of the company. Importantly, under this statute, minority shareholders who file a derivative action in the name of a closely held company may request the court to order that all recoveries obtained for the company in the action be paid directly to them rather than to the company.

---

[84] Id. at 495-96.

[85] See TEX. BUS. ORG. CODE § 21.551, et seq. (Vernon's 2010).

[86] See TEX. BUS. ORG. CODE § 21.552-553 (Vernon's 2010).

[87] Id. § 21.563 (Vernon's 2010).

[88] Id.

In the limited partnership context, whether or not a limited partner in a Texas limited partnership has a direct action against the general partner for breaches of fiduciary duties when the company has sustained the injury remains an open question. Some states, such as Florida, apply a "separate and distinct" injury test to corporations and partnerships. Under this test, to pursue a direct action, the minority owner must establish that he suffered an injury separate and distinct from the other owners. Limited partners are not directly injured when they are damaged only to the extent of their proportionate interest in the partnership.[89] Therefore, a limited partner faces a risk of dismissal in bringing a claim directly against the general partner for breach of fiduciary duties (rather than in a derivative action) if the injuries were sustained by the limited partnership itself rather than by the limited partner individually.

Another significant advantage that exists for a shareholder who files a derivative action under Texas law is the plaintiff's right under the statute to recover his legal fees and litigation costs "if the court finds that the proceeding brought by the shareholder has resulted in a substantial benefit to the domestic or foreign corporation."[90] This is sometimes referred to as a "bounty hunter" type of statute because it authorizes recovery of attorney's for the successful prosecution of claims by shareholders who bring derivative actions.

J. REMEDIES FOR MINORITY SHAREHOLDER OPPRESSION

The harshest remedy for shareholder oppression is liquidation of the corporation, which is authorized by Texas statute. See TEX. BUS. ORG. CODE § 11.404 (Vernon's 2011). Texas courts have interpreted their equitable powers broadly, however, to permit them to narrowly tailor remedies for oppression that are less harsh than liquidation. Specifically, courts have reasoned that if they are empowered to dissolve the corporation—the harshest equitable remedy—then they are also empowered to impose other equitable remedies that provide an outcome that would be less drastic than dissolution.[91] Using their equitable powers, courts have discretion to tailor an equitable remedy to the fit the specific factual situation.[92]

Given the harshness of the dissolution remedy and the reluctance of courts to apply it, a more common remedy for shareholder oppression is a court-ordered buyout of the minority shareholder's interest by the majority shareholder(s).[93] Texas courts order buyouts under their general equitable powers as a less harsh remedy than dissolution, but courts also have the power to impose other less onerous equitable remedies, including reinstatement of the minority shareholder to the board or the mandatory issuance of court-ordered dividends.

---

[89] See Litman v. Prudential-Bache Properties, Inc., 611 A.2d 12, 16 (Del. Ch. 1992).

[90] See TEX. BUS. ORG. CODE § 21.561; see also O'Neill v. Church's Fried Chicken, Inc., 910 F.2d 263, 267 (5th Cir. 1990); Basralian v. Hatfield, No. 07-96-0326-CV, 1998 WL 40415, at *1 (Tex. App.—Amarillo Feb. 2, 1998, no pet.); Bayoud v. Bayoud, 797 S.W.2d 304, 307 (Tex. App.—Dallas 1990, writ denied).

[91] Davis, 754 S.W.2d at 380; Duncan, 671 S.W.2d at 953; Redmon, 202 S.W.3d at 235; Gibney v. Culver, No. 13-06-112-CV, 2008 WL 1822767, at *17 (Tex. App.—Corpus Christi Apr. 24, 2008, pet. denied.).

[92] Davis, 754 S.W.2d at 380.

[93] Lund v. Krass Snow & Schmutter, P.C., 879 N.Y.S.2d 127, 128 (N.Y.A.D. 1 Dept. 2009) (affirming trial court judgment ordering buyout of minority shareholder Court of appeals affirmed judgment awarding plaintiff a buyout plus post-judgment interest).

K. ISSUES REGARDING THE BUYOUT REMEDY

One of the most critical issues that arises in a case presenting a claim for minority shareholder oppression is the standard of value that is applied if the court orders a buyout of the, i.e., should the shares be valued at "fair value" or "fair market value."[94] The decision on valuation standards is for the trial court to decide, because the issue of whether the majority shareholders oppressed the minority owner is a question of law. As noted earlier, the trial court decides whether oppression has been established as a matter of law based on factual disputes that are resolved by the jury in predicate act questions in the charge. Further, once the trial court concludes that the majority has engaged in oppressive conduct, the trial court has considerable discretion to apply an appropriate equitable remedy. Any equitable relief the trial court awards to the minority shareholder may be overturned on appeal only for an abuse of discretion.

If oppression is found by the trial court, the valuation battle becomes the extent to which the court will apply "minority discounts" to the valuation of the minority shareholder's stock. These discounts are based on the lack of marketability of the stock in a private company and the lack of control associated with minority ownership in the business. The fundamental distinction is between "Fair Value" also known as "Enterprise Value", on the one side, where no discounts apply to the minority interest, or "Fair Market Value", on the other side, where minority discounts apply in full force. The fair market value of the minority interest is "the price at which property would change hands between a willing buyer and a willing seller when neither party is under an obligation to act."[95] A fair market value will usually substantially discount the minority interest in a private company corporation for lack of marketability and lack of control.[96]

Before the Dallas Court of Appeals' Rupe opinion in March 2011, many courts declined to include a lack of control discount in the context of a court-ordered buyout, because it would "deprive minority shareholders of their proportionate interest in a going concern,"[97] and would undermine the remedial goal of protecting "minority shareholders from being forced to sell at unfair values imposed by those dominating the corporation while allowing the majority to proceed with its desired corporate action."[98] The lack of marketability discount, however, has been viewed as more debatable and courts would consider adjusting the valuation to reflect the fact that shares in a close corporation lack liquidity.[99] Thus, majority shareholders will argue strenuously to apply discounts and use the fair market value standard to determine the value of the minority shareholder's interest. By contrast, minority shareholders seek buyouts of their

---

[94] See generally Douglas K. Moll, Shareholder Oppression and "Fair Value": Of Discounts, Dates, and Dastartdly Deeds in the Close Corporation, 54 DUKE L.J. 293 (Nov. 2004); Balsamides v. Protameen Chems., Inc., 734 A.2d 721, 734-35 (N.J. 1999).

[95] Pueblo Bancorporation v. Lindoe, Inc., 63 P.3d 353, 362 (Colo. 2003).

[96] See DOUGLAS K. MOLL & ROBERT A. RAGAZZO, THE LAW OF CLOSELY HELD CORPORATIONS § 8.02[B][3] (2009).

[97] In re Friedman, 661 N.E.2d 972, 976-77 (N.Y. 1995).

[98] Id.; see also Balsamides, 734 A.2d at 734-35.

[99] Pueblo Bancorporation, 63 P.3d at 357 n.2; Advanced Commc'n Design, Inc. v. Follett, 615 N.W.2d 285, 291 (Minn. 2000).

interest at fair value, a valuation with no discounts in which the minority shareholder receives a full share of the entire enterprise value based on the percentage of ownership.[100]

The Rupe decision was the first reported Texas case to require fair market discounts to be applied to the valuation of the minority shareholder's stock interest. While Rupe upheld the trial court's finding that the minority shareholder had been oppressed by the majority shareholders, the court overturned an award of more than $7 million – as determined by the jury – for the minority shareholder's stock interest. On remand, Rupe required the jury, on retrial, to apply discounts for lack of control and lack of marketability in valuing the minority shareholder's stock interest in the company. As noted earlier, Rupe has now been argued to the Texas Supreme Court with a decision expected later this year or in the first part of 2014.

In Rupe, the appellate court held that minority (or fair market value) discounts must be applied by the jury when the minority stockholder complains that the majority shareholders blocked the sales of the minority's stock to a third party. The Rupe court held as follows:

> We conclude that a buyout is an available remedy for shareholder oppression under Texas law and that, under the circumstances, appellants' conduct in refusing to meet—or allow RIC management to meet—with prospective purchasers constituted oppressive conduct as to Ann. We also conclude that the trial court did not abuse its discretion in ordering appellants to cause RIC to buy the Stock as an equitable remedy for this oppressive conduct. To this extent, we overrule appellants' first issue. As a result, we need not consider whether the trial court erred in concluding that appellants' other conduct—standing alone or in conjunction with their conduct as a whole—was oppressive.[101]

The appellate court in Rupe also favorably cited commentary by Professor Doug Moll, who has written extensively regarding minority shareholder oppression claims.[102] Prof. Moll, in turn, has expressed the view that trial courts should adopt a flexible approach in construing minority shareholder oppression claims and fashioning remedies for oppressed minority shareholders.[103]

As an alternative to a court-imposed equitable buyout award, some states offer the majority shareholder the option to buy the minority owner's shares. For example, California permits the corporation or the shareholder with more than 50% to avoid dissolution by buying the dissenter's stock for "fair value."[104] If the parties cannot agree on fair value, the court can order evidence submitted to a panel of three disinterested appraisers selected by the Court. The

---

[100] See generally Douglas K. Moll, Shareholder Oppression and "Fair Value": Of Discounts, Dates, and Dastartdly Deeds in the Close Corporation, 54 DUKE L.J. 293 (Nov. 2004).

[101] 339 S.W.3d at 299.

[102] Id. at 291 nn. 24-25, 27-29, 299 n. 42 (citing Moll publications).

[103] See, e.g., Douglas Moll, Majority Rule Isn't What It Used It Used To Be: Shareholder Oppression In Texas Close Corporations, 63 TEX. B.J. 434 (2000).

[104] CAL. CORP. CODE § 2000 (West 2010).

Court then enters a decree based on its review of and affirmation of the valuation of the appraisers. The decree gives the corporation, or, if it declines, the majority shareholder, the right to avoid dissolution by purchasing the minority's shares for the price stated in the decree.[105]

L. OTHER NON-BUYOUT REMEDIES THAT MAY BE AVAILABLE TO MINORITY SHAREHOLDERS

There are many potential remedies other than dissolution and buyouts, although they are the ones that are most commonly discussed. Some states seek to encourage creative judicial resolution of shareholder oppression claims by codifying equitable options. For example, South Carolina's statute includes nine separate equitable options other than a buyout or dissolution.[106] Illinois's statutes identify eleven alternatives.[107] California simply instructs its courts to do equity.[108] In states lacking specific statutory authority, courts have nonetheless picked up the mantle of equitable creativity in addressing shareholder oppression.

The list of potential other remedies for shareholder oppression include at least the following:

- Altering or setting aside an action of the corporation, its shareholders or directors;
- Cancelling a provision in the articles of incorporation or by-laws;
- Ordering payment of dividends;
- Appointing a custodian to manage the business;
- Appointing an individual to be an officer or director, or a provisional officer/director;
- Removing a director or officer from office;
- Ordering an accounting;
- Awarding damages;
- Reinstating the minority as an employee;
- Requiring repayment of sums wrongly siphoned from the corporation;
- Limiting the salary of the majority or defining certain amounts of compensation as a constructive dividend;
- Ordering issued stock to be cancelled or redeemed; and/or
- Permitting the minority to purchase additional share.[109]

---

[105] Id..

[106] S.C. CODE 33-18-410 (West 2010).

[107] 805 ILL. COMP. STAT. 5/12.56 (West 2010).

[108] CAL. CORP. CODE § 1804 (West 2010) ("After hearing the court may decree a winding up and dissolution of the corporation if cause therefore is shown or, with or without winding up and dissolution, may make such orders and decrees and issue such injunctions in the case as justice and equity require.").

[109] See, e.g., Brodie v. Jordan, 857 N.E.2d 1076, 1082 (Mass. 2006) (discussing prospective injunctive relief to allow minority to participate in the business, including reinstatement of employment and/or back pay); Hirsch v. Cahn Elec. Co., 694 So. 2d 636, 643 (La. Ct. App. 1997) (ordering return of $200,000 in excessive compensation and payment of a dividend); Brenner v. Berkowitz, 634 A.2d 1019, 1033 (N.J. 1993) (discussing alternatives to dissolution); Balvik v. Sylvester, 411 N.W.2d 383, 388-89 (N.D. 1987) (same); Masinter v. Webco Co., 262 S.E.2d 433, 441 & n.12 (W. Va. 1980) (same); Baker v. Comm. Body Builders, Inc., 507 P.2d 387, 395-96 (Or. 1973) (same); see also 805 ILL. COMP. STAT. 5/12.56 (West 2010); S.C. CODE 33-18-410 (West 2010); the Model Statutory Close Corporation Supplement (1993).

M. A LOOK AT THE FUTURE: UNCHARTED WATERS

Following the argument of the Rupe case to the Supreme Court in February 2013, the ball is now squarely in the Court's hands regarding questions surrounding the validity and scope of the claim for minority shareholder oppression. Lawyers, business owners and investors are all awaiting the Court's decision, which is expected in late 2013 or in the first half of 2014. Defense counsel and majority owners may be hopeful that the Court will either invalidate the claim for shareholder oppression entirely or eliminate the buyout remedy, but this result seems unlikely. First, as discussed previously, Section 11.404 of the Texas Business Organizations Code authorizes a Texas trial court to appoint a receiver, or to order that the company be liquidated when there is a showing of "illegal, oppressive or fraudulent" conduct by the "governing persons" of the business entity. Id. § 11.404(a)(1)(C).

Second, an additional reason to express caution about the prospect for a decision by the Court that would give unfettered discretion to majority owners is the strong public perception that corporate leaders of public and private companies have run amok in recent years. This is particularly so in Texas where claims regarding the Stanford Ponzi scheme continue to be litigated and the corruption of Enron's senior management has not been forgotten. The distress over misconduct by corporate officers, and the devastating results caused to their companies and shareholders, led to the passage of Sarbanes-Oxley (SOX) in 2003. SOX has been in place for most of this past decade, but as the Stanford case shows, the corruption factor remains. The Texas Supreme Court may therefore be reluctant to abandon a claim that has served Texas reasonably well in the private company context. Moreover, the oppression claim is based on a Texas statute that has not been amended in 50 years and on fiduciary duties that reflect bedrock common law principles.

Third, and finally, a rejection of the oppression doctrine would jettison more than 25 years of case law consistently upholding the validity of the claim that was explained at length in Davis v. Sheerin. The Supreme Court may be unwilling to overturn (and abandon) the precedential value of this extensive appellate case law. Many astute appellate judges have studied this claim and concluded that shareholder oppression is a cause of action well-placed in Texas law. As a result, if the Court concludes the oppression doctrine has become unwieldy in its present form, the Court may devote its efforts to refining the standards that apply to govern the rights of minority investors and the corresponding duties of majority owners.

Stated another way, majority owners of private Texas companies may not be required by statute or case law to serve as their brother's keeper, but unless things change at the Supreme Court, they cannot oppress the minority owners in the business with impunity under Texas law.